GREAT DISTANCE RUNNER DESTITUTE WHEN HE DIES

Squanders Fortune Accumulated When in His Prime and Dies in Poverty—Recognized as Champion in Early 70s and 80s—Trained Famous Kilrain for Fight With Sullivan.

Cambridge, Eng., Oct. 19.—Charles Rowell, in his best days the finest long distance runner in the world, is dead after a long illness. He had fallen on evil days and died practically destitute.

"Charlie" Rowell, who was 54 years of age, started when E. P. Weston was popularizing long distance running. On a visit to America he accomplished some extraordinary records and made $100,000 prize money in the late '70s and early '80s.

Rowell's specialty was the six-day pos-a-you-please contest, and the famous Madison Square gardens in New York were, between 1879 and 1883, the scene of some of his greatest triumphs. Notable among these was his defeat of Corky in the six-day race and another big feature was the covering of over 99 miles in 12 hours. On one occasion the participants of some of his opponents managed to drug his food, causing him to lose the race in which he was engaged.

To the present day Rowell's records from 85 miles to 150 miles and 160 to 221 miles and from 240 to 350 miles are still standing. At one time he was worth over $350,000, but after retiring from running he devoted himself to the turf and speedily lost the whole of his fortune.

At one time Rowell was a very fine sculler and later in life he owned a few race horses, one of which was called Jake Kilrain after the American boxer of that name.

Rowell was greatly interested in pugilism and trained Charles Mitchell for his celebrated contest with bare fists with John L. Sullivan, near Chantilly on March 10, 1888.

PENNSYLVANIA'S LINE-UP UNDERGOES SOME CHANGES

Philadelphia, Oct. 19.—The University of Pennsylvania football team has been so completely shifted within the last week as to be scarcely recognized as the combination which started the season. The trouble all started by the failure of Large to make good at end. Several of the other substitutes were tried here successfully, but with poor results.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PLAYERS OF MOST VALUE TO TEAMS

Individual stars are not Always a Teams Best Assets—Mathewson, Gibson, Clarke, Tinker, and Bresnahan are Selected—Rucker is Willing Worker.

New York, Oct. 19.—There must be on every baseball team one man who is the most valuable member of the team. Team play is the thing, and pennants are won not by the work of the individual but by the work of the whole; but certain individuals by their superior ability add strength to the whole, tone up the team and by their own efforts are responsible for a percentage of opportunities created and accepted, which count greatly in the long run. The more strong individuals the better, if they can work harmoniously.

What one player, then, is the most important on each team? What one player can the different clubs of the National league least afford to lose? It is a subject for a great variety of opinion. The manager has his opinion, and so do the voters. In some cases no doubt they would agree, in some they would differ.

There isn't much doubt that Mathewson would get the popular verdict when it came to deciding who was the nearest to indispensable of the active players of the Giants. A pitcher, no matter how successful he may be, isn't necessarily the most valuable man on a team. There may be another who is more influential in the team's welfare; but in the case of Mathewson he is such a dominating influence, his presence in the box exercising such a grating, stimulating effect on his fellows, that besides his physical worth he imparts a moral influence of no mean degree. Take him away, and for a while at least his place would be harder to fill than that of any other man.

Pittsburg without Clarke or without Wagner would be deprived of a valuable unit; so would it be without Leach or without Miller. Yet there is on the team a player, not one of these four, whose absence from the field would make a bigger difference in the season's showing than any of the four stars mentioned. That one is Gibson, the catcher. He has come to be the most important single cog in the machine, knowing and handling, as he does, all of the pitchers and filling day after day, as he does, a position in which head work is a prime requisite. When a catcher is so closely identified with the methods and tactics of a team, catching every day, there is no place so difficult to duplicate with another man.

To pick out the man on the Chicago Cubs whose absence would most disturb the nice adjustment of that organization's mechanism is rather puzzling. The team is admirably fortified with high-class utility men and so smooth of action that it goes along well with a regular out occasionally. Probably with Tinker out for any length of time the harmonious balance would be most disturbed. Tinker is the best ground coverer in the infield, the connecting link in its workings, and he is a power in the attack as a clean-up hitter, one capable of long drives such as break up games. That has been proven time and again. The moral effect and physical effect of a prolonged absence on his part would be felt more than that of any other player.

Mike Mitchell may be rated as Cincinnati's most valuable player. He is the ablest man in the Red's attack, a hard and reliable hitter, a run producer. Besides he is one of the best throwing outfielders and first-class in all departments. Not showy, he nevertheless is an anchor to windward in the team's tactics.

On the Philadelphia team the palm goes to a catcher, the industrious and alert Dolan, a gingery player, good with the stick and a bulwark in defense. It is pretty close between him and Doolan, the latter being the type of player who keeps his mates keyed up and a general as well.

Were Bresnahan playing regularly for the St. Louis Cardinals he would be the one whose place would be hardest to fill. As it is he is a rare bird at getting work out of men and inspiring them to put forth their best efforts; but he has been out of the game with a lame arm a great deal this season and must be considered as a manager rather than a player. With him out Konechny, the first baseman, is the most prominent factor day in and day out. He is in the game always, knows it perhaps better than any of the others, is a good man to bat in runs, puts life into his work, never lets his interest lag and is steady.

In Rucker, Brooklyn has a strong and willing young pitcher, and a skillful one as well. Perhaps more than any of his associates has, he puts heart into his fellow players by his ability to go into the box against opponents, strong as well as weak, win his game and atop the team's loving streak. He looms up as a formidable power over a weak team and is the sort of pitcher whose work betrays confidence in the other players. As an inside man Rucker is active, but not of the dominating quality of Rucker. Judging by recent work here, Rucker just now is in the game and plays more than any other member of the Boston Nationals. Not only does he handle his position well, but plays as if his heart was in his work quite as much as if he were on a championship aggregation.

SHE FINDS A FLAT.

"Well," said Polly, smiling sweetly as she poured the tea, "I saw a perfectly lovely flat this morning."
"Oh, nonsense, Polly," said I, "we're not going to move this year. I admit this place isn't any too comfortable and the wall paper in the parlor is the limit, but if we move the chances are we wouldn't get any thing better. All moving would mean would be $47 to a lot of furniture breakers to come in here and smash all our bric-a-brac and make dents in the top of the piano to say nothing of our having to break in the new janitor and tip a lot of new elevator boys. We stay where we are."
"I've taken it too," said Polly, apparently paying not the least bit of attention to my observations, "on a long lease."

"What?" I cried indignantly. "Taken on a flat on a long lease without consulting me?"

"You asked me to, dear," said Polly, demurely.

"I?" I roared.
"Yes, and I told you that in spite of all your faults I loved you still," said Polly, "and so I took you for life—just the dearest old flat there ever was!"

TWO YALE STAR MEN

MURPHY (KNEELING), KILPATRICK, (STANDING.)

Kilpatrick gives promise of being one of the best ends Yale ever had. Last year he played a great game until an injury to his knee forced him to retire for the season. He is speedy, having held a place on the track team in the spring as a hurdler. Kilpatrick is a product of Phillips-Andover and was one of the star prep athletes when in school. In addition to his offensive and defensive strength he is a reliable place kicker. Murphy has been used at halfback in the early season games. He is a baseball and basketball player and one of Yale's all-round athletes.
